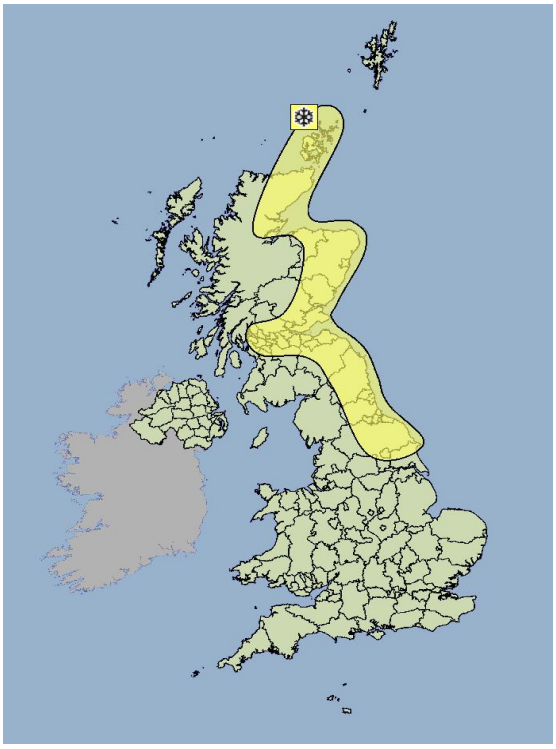
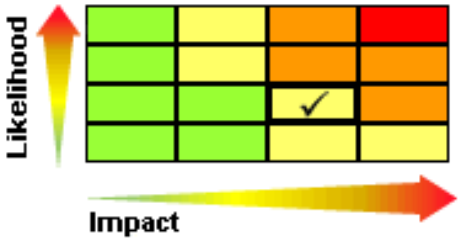
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Frequent snow showers are likely to continue feeding in from the North Sea on a very cold easterly wind. Due to the nature of showers, some places are expected to receive an additional 5-10 cm of snow per day, whereas other places nearby may only receive small amounts. Brisk winds will lead to some drifting of snow, as well as a severe wind chill, although these are expected to begin to ease through Friday.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 00:05 on Fri, 02nd Mar 2018 until 23:55 on Sat, 03rd Mar 2018

Snow showers are expected to continue over parts of northern Britain, bringing a further risk of ice and further accumulations of snow.

Further delays to travel and public transport could occur, whilst some rural communities could become or remain cut off. Further impacts to power supplies/mobile phone coverage are also possible.
